Since 1914 the publications of the Naval War College on international law have contained documents relating particularly to maritime affairs in the time of war. During this period various topics and situations have been discussed at the college. In the present volume some of these topics and situations are presented.

These discussions upon international law were, as in recent years, conducted by George Grafton Wilson, LL. D., professor of international law in Harvard University, under the auspices of the War College authorities.

J. R. POINSETT PRINGLE,
Rear Admiral, United States Navy,
